The impression has become general that the interests of the country demand increased facilities in this direction. As yet, however, no consensus of opinion has been arrived at on the two essential points of the movement. What does the country need? How is it to be obtained? In view of the University s interest in the subject especially as regards the higher forms of technical training, it has appeared to me appropriate that I should contribute my quota of information and criticism. We are still at the stage of abstract discussion and of propositions more or less vague. A full discussion now from all points of view is the surest means of avoiding mistakes in the final settlement. Much of the difficulty surrounding the question arises from its newness. Some twenty-five years ago technical education was a burning question in Toronto, and at that time a solution was found to which I shall refer presently. But the recollection of the discussion of that time has passed from the minds of the present educational generation, and we are face to face with the old problem in a new form. Before proceeding further, let us consider what we mean by technical education. This is necessary, since the term has been used so loosely in the recent discussions as to lead to great confusion. Strictly speaking, the term technical education is applicable to any course of training for a trade or profession, not excluding the so-called learned professions....
